

LITERARY NOTES.

The finest hand-made paper and new types have been used by Mr. J. Osgood & Co., in their edition of "Dr. Grimes' Secret," and that of the Carlyle-Emerson correspondence. Every copy of the two editions was taken immediately, none remaining on the day after publication.

It is reported that Miss Rose Terry Cooke—who is a rare delineator of New-England character—has engaged to write a long novel for J. Osgood & Co.

The pleasantest thing that has been said of Trollope and his Autobiography is found in these concluding sentences of an article in The London World: "There was no man of his time who performed such substantial and even gratuitous acts of kindness to his friends. Not one of these is mentioned by him in these records."

Mrs. Pott, the lady who made herself absurd in the editing and annotating of Bacon's "Fossils," has been committing the further folly of writing a life of Bacon from her own point of view, showing that the history of Bacon's mind, studies and occupations corresponds minutely with the production of Shakespeare's plays.

Mr. Julian Sturgis has written another story. "The Jewel in the Lotus," Miss Thackeray's new novel, will be brought out immediately by J. B. Lippincott & Co. While not so striking a work, perhaps, as "Signor Monaldini's Niece," it is full of good character-drawing.

The pecuniary rewards of Trollope's literary work were not remarkable considering the monies paid to others of the guild. Bulwer received for the copyright of the cheap edition of his works alone the sum of $150,000; other large amounts were paid for the books at the time of their publication. For "Endymion" Lord Beaconsfield was paid $50,000; and Marryat received $100,000 for one of his works.

From his new edition of "Literature and Dogma" Mr. Matthew Arnold has expunged "The Three Lord Shaftesburys," at the same time expressing his regret that the illustration had ever been used, inasmuch as it has given pain to his lordship.

A history of Georgia from its earliest period to the close of the Revolution has been written by Colonel Charles J. Jones, of Augusta, and will shortly be published by Houghton, Mifflin & Co., in two octavo volumes. Colonel Jones has spent many years in the collection of material and has prepared what is supposed to be an exhaustive work.
